Teacher uses toys to improve coordination

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Transforming destructive behavior into constructive conduct can be as simple as picking up a toy.

So says Bette Waggoner, who is teaching her special education students at Sycamore Elementary School to use toys to develop better coordination.

The Upland teacher submitted one of the 31 proposals received by the Upland Unified School District last fall for Classroom Teacher Instructional Improvement Program (CTIIP) grants, Associate Superintendent Loren Sanchez said.

Waggoner's $480 proposal was one of the 14 the district chose to spend its $20,000 allotment on, he said.

Waggoner chose a plastic toy robot with interchangeable pieces to help her first- and second-graders learn to build. The toy develops hand-eye coordination, especially for those students with disabilities like cerebral palsy.

The toy comes with diagrams for different designs.

Because the students have learning disabilities, group efforts sometimes are harder for them and providing toys makes the projects more palatable for them, Waggoner said.

With that in mind, she purchased a play-kitchen sink-and-stove unit with last year's CTIIP funds. The unit helped her students learn socialization skills, she said.

"We have some students who hardly ever talk," she said, explaining that working as a

Bear Gulch students can't wait to get paws on keys

By Mike Krapfl

Computers didn't seem a bit strange in the hands of Bear Gulch Elementary School second graders last week.

The students comfortably sat giggling before the machines' keyboards and monitors as they pointed toward the computer trains they were to add: three trains plus three trains equals how many cats, the machine asked.

Jordan Barton, 7, answered six trains.

After being congratulated by the computer for his math skill, Barton said he liked learning a little about math on the computers.

"What I like," he said, "is the pictures and I like the games."

Barton's answer was good news to Rosa Gallardo, the assistant principal at Bear Gulch.

"We want these children to learn to enjoy working with computers while they reinforce some of their classroom skills," she said.

Some of the second grade classroom skills the school's 16 Apple computers reinforce are addition, subtraction, the alphabet and concentration, Gallardo said.

By the time the second graders become sixth graders, Gallardo said, their familiarity with the machines will enable them to use a word processor and even do some simple computer programming.

Seven-year-old Genese Anderson said the idea of making her own computer programs "sounds like fun because then you can do all sorts of things on the computer."

Mary Harker, the school's computer aide, said helping Anderson and her 688 fellow students every week is not quite the chore it might seem.

"These kids are definitely not afraid of computers," she said. "They never have to be encouraged to work."

group requires communication.

But the students were very willing to talk and laugh one morning last week as they played with the robot and toy kitchen.

"They're delighted. They don't usually get to play at this time of day," Waggoner said, explaining that playtime usually is in the afternoons, while the mornings are reserved for reading, writing and arithmetic.

Waggoner also ordered a computer program that will transform the normal keyboard into one alphabetically arranged and adorned with Muppet characters.

To assure that the tops of small hinged boxes will align perfectly with the bottoms, seat the hinges first with "5-minute" epoxy and install the screws later. Smear a thin coat of the epoxy on the hinges, place them in position (separating the leaves with a wedge if necessary) and put the top on the box, aligning all around. To be safe, give the epoxy a full half-hour to set, open the box top, drill pilot holes and install the screws.

Six-inch lengths of garden hose fastened to the wall or bench with two nails at the bottom make excellent tool holders for screwdrivers, awls, etc. Tools are easy to remove, and the soft, flexible hose won't damage sharp edges.

To make a really good disc sander, glue coarse and fine discs to an old flat-sided, fine tooth sawblade and mount it on the tablesaw's arbor. For safety, use a bench grinder to remove the teeth, then true up on the arbor.

Another school district has building tax in mind

By Marianne Aiken

A second Rancho Cucamonga school district wants to charge a special tax to developers to help build schools following a drop in builders fees Jan. 1.

The Cucamonga School District board of trustees last Wednesday unanimously decided to hold a special election June 2 to charge a $2,000-per-house tax on new residential construction.

The tax would apply only to new housing. No existing housing would be taxed, said Superintendent John Costello.

The tax would start June 3, with two-thirds voter approval.

Also in Rancho Cucamonga, the Etiwanda School District will hold a special election March 3 to levy a tax of $1,600 per home on new residential construction.

R.C. school announces honor roll

Rancho Cucamonga Middle School has announced its honor roll for the first semester. Included are:

- Seventh grade — Vincent Alvarez, Terry Ayler, Brian Beaudette, Stephanie Becerra, Rebecca Henkel, Chalalai Haulsil, Quincy Johnson, Jeffrey Jones, Lynna Kamura and Yun Kim.

Robert Lewis, Eduardo Licea, Brandy Lolwing, Peter McCoy, Christine Olinger, Brandy Pacheco, Nicole Patenburg, Erin Patterson, Michael Peterson and Hugh Quach.

Adela Quiroz, Belinda Ramirez, Ronnie Renspie, Angela Rodriguez, Annabella Rodriguez, Joaquin Salaz, Kristoffer Samoylenko, Daniel Sciortino, Connie Snider, Marie Thomas and Brian Wichert.

- Eighth grade — Robert Abijay, Scott Adams, Albert Alvarado, Eric Andersen, Vassil Apostolov, Rachael Breiting, Francisco Chihuahua, Bonar Chui, Robert Durant and Stacey Fischer.

Wendy George, Jennifer Gomez, Juan Gonzalez, Cherryl Gray, Christina Holladay, Sarah Keith, Kristi Landkammer, Harri Lau, Lima Lauron and Steven Luther.

Alex Mix, Manuel Monteiro, Richard Robinson, Angelina Romero, Zachary Schrib, Tammy Schryver, Shay Stewart, Tshaka Stewart, Sven Thomas and Bethany Thompson.

Jessica Tolliver, Adriana Torres, Heather Twite, Renee Vaca, Jana Villanore and David Witt.

In the fast-growing school districts of the West Valley, the new developer fees that became state law Jan. 1 are not enough to pay for new schools that need to be built, educators say.

The $2,000-per-house tax in Cucamonga is supposed to make up for the difference between the $2,633-per-house builders fee the district used to charge and the approximately $1,000-per-house fee it now can levy under the new law, Costello said.

"It's really a way for us to deal with growth and a way to accommodate growth as it happens," he said.

The special tax could be passed on to new home buyers in the form of higher real estate prices. Or, property owners selling land to developers might have to sell their land for less because of the fees, Costello said.

The Cucamonga School District is expected to grow steadily for the next 13 years and peak out at 5,000 students, according to a district study.

The district's current enrollment is 1,504.

Miss Rancho Cucamonga applications now available

Applications are now available for the 1987 Miss Rancho Cucamonga Pageant.

Contestants must be between the ages of 17 and 25, single and a Rancho Cucamonga resident for at least six months.

This year's pageant will take place Saturday, April 4 in the Chaffey College Theater.

The pageant is conducted each year to find a woman to represent Rancho Cucamonga at a number of city and chamber affairs. This year both the city and chamber will be celebrating their 10th anniversaries.

Pageant Chairman John

Mannerino expresses the philosophy of the pageant as "a rewarding opportunity for all who enter with each young lady encountering a positive growth experience she will be able to draw from the rest of her life."

Along with Miss Rancho Cucamonga, Miss Foothill Fire District (first runner-up) and a second runner-up will be crowned. They will receive cash scholarships, gift certificates and trophies.

Each contestant will receive her competition bathing suit compliments of the chamber of commerce along with instruction in make-up, color and wardrobe coordination and basic modeling techniques.

All of the contestants will appear in the specially choreographed opening by pageant choreographer and director Diane Dyan of Olympic Studios.

The Miss Rancho Cucamonga Pageant is accredited by the Miss USA-Miss World organization.

Applications are available from today through Feb. 16, from the Rancho Cucamonga Chamber of Commerce, 7365 Carnelian Ave., Suite 130, Rancho Cucamonga.

Fire board squabble goes to commission

By Mike Krapfl

The recent Foothill Fire Protection District finger-pointing is hardly a thing of the past.

Less than a week after Foothill Fire District Board members used a meeting to call each other "liars," the finger-pointing continued last week when the district asked the state's Fair Political Practices Commission to investigate alleged misconduct of board member John Lyons.

The district is asking the commission to determine if a political postcard Lyons allegedly distributed during November's Rancho Cucamonga City Council election violates any provisions of the Political Reform Act or the California Election Code, according to a letter sent to the commission last week by Fire Chief Dennis Michael.

Once such a request is received, said commission

Media Director Lynn Montgomery, an attorney examines it to determine whether the request should be referred to a team for investigation, or be dismissed.

If violations are found by investigators, she said, administrative or civil action can be taken by the commission.

That, she said, generally means fines of up to $2,000 for every violation found.

Asked for a response to the fire district's request for an investigation, Lyons said, "It's a legal matter now and, therefore, shouldn't be commented on."

The fire district's board voted to request the investigation at a special meeting Dec. 29. At that meeting, the board formally disapproved of Lyons' alleged involvement in the distribution of postcards asking voters "to vote no on Mr. (Kevin) Eggleston."

Eggleston is a fire board member and was one of eight candidates running for two City Council seats in November.

The cards alleged Eggleston attempted to use his position as a board member in "a back-room deal" to become the district's fire chief in 1984.

Eggleston has repeatedly denied the charge.

Eggleston accused Lyons of distributing the cards after a person Eggleston says is a handwriting expert linked a sample of Lyons' handwriting with a hand-written address on one of the postcards.

New R.C. planner has genuine love for land

By Mike Krapfl

Environmentalists are people planning commissioners often listen to but aren't always accused of being.

Rancho Cucamonga's newest commissioner, Bruce Emerick, says he's an exception.

Emerick, who was appointed to fill the Planning Commission seat left by Dennis Stout when Stout was elected mayor in November, was sworn into the position last week.

Before the meeting, Emerick said, "I have a deep interest in the environment. I'm an avid backpacker and I take my son out to the local mountains nearly every weekend."

Because of his interest in mountaineering, he said, "I'm committed to protecting the foothills and the foothill communities. That's why I wanted to get back into city planning."

Emerick, a civil attorney in Rancho Cucamonga, worked as a staff planner in Upland, La Habra and West Covina before attending law school.

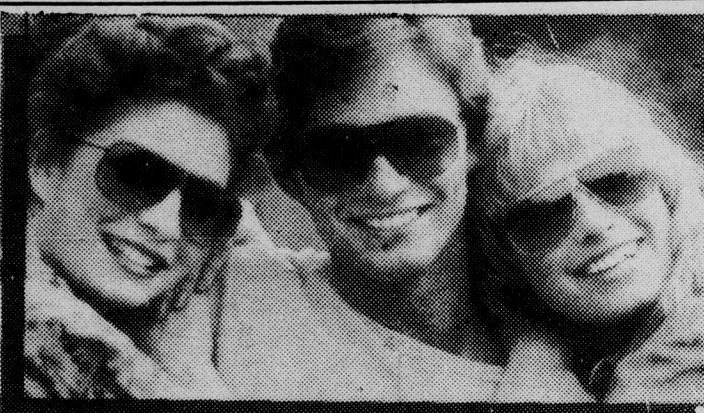

He has a master's degree in urban planning from Cal Poly Pomona. To earn that degree, he said he wrote a thesis appropriate for a West Valley planner: "Urbanization of Agricultural Land in California."

Although he calls himself an environmentalist, Emerick said, "I do balance that view with a knowledge of developers' concerns. I do know a project has to be profitable or it won't get built."

Emerick said he's excited about helping developers plan Rancho Cucamonga's development "because it looks like the planning process is working in Rancho Cucamonga."

"Before," he said, "the city's planning was terrible. There was

Bowling a joy at any age for these keglers

Robert E. "Rosko" Kidwell recently put up a challenge at the Haven Hills Bowl in Rancho Cucamonga.

And many of the senior citizens who bowl regularly there showed up to test him.

Winning, though, wasn't on the minds of Kidwell or anyone else who played. They said they simply enjoy playing the game and showing others that age doesn't stop them from living their lives.

But to Kidwell, a semi-retired Santa Fe Railway machinist from Rialto, his playing has a purpose.

"I bowl, jump out of airplanes and run to show people a person can still function despite having a colostomy," he said.

Ten years ago doctors removed eight feet of his intestines and he now wears an external bag attached to his body to collect wastes.

Kidwell travels throughout the country spreading his message about colostomy patients. He challenges himself and others simply to gain their attention, but he said he doesn't preach on the subject.

"Normally when I'm talking to someone, the subject comes up. A lot of people have questions. I try and answer them. I wasn't that active before my surgery in 1976, but now I have more of a reason. I think my efforts help," he said.

Kidwell wasn't the only bowler who had a physical problem at the challenge match.

Richard Gibson, 64, decided to play along with Kidwell. Gibson suffered a stroke and said bowling is good therapy for him.

"I also just like to bowl. I can still do things despite my age and my having a stroke. I bowl twice a week," he said.

Frank DiNardo, 74, of Upland doesn't have any physical handicaps. He said his bowling and exercising just keeps him young.

"Nobody ever really feels their age," said Ben Silber, 65, who also has no physical ailments.

Silber bowls regularly and coaches a junior league at Haven Bowl.

"I don't feel old," he said.

Debbie Briones, Haven Hills Bowl senior director, said many local senior citizens help remain active at the center.

"I don't care where you are, I don't think we have enough activities for seniors. Here we try and provide as many programs as possible because I know they all want to remain active and have fun in the process," Briones said.

little attention paid to aesthetics nor were environmental ideas taken into account.

"But lately they have been," he said. "To see that, all you have to do is look at Haven Avenue."

Emerick said he wants to have a voice in the further beautification of the city "just because I have the background and I have an interest in protecting the environment."

Emerick said he is not at all interested in following the political path linking the city's Planning Commission with the City Council.

Boy with transplant still on road to recovery

Despite possible stroke, following surgery, liver functioning well

By Kimberly Heinrichs

He's suffered a possible stroke and been returned to intensive care twice since his liver transplant a month ago, but his mother says Christopher Sumner still is on the road to recovery.

"It's like that for every one of these families," Diane Sumner said in a telephone conversation last week from Christopher's room at UCLA Medical Center, which specializes in liver transplants. "Nobody sails through."

On New Year's Eve day, the Upland boy slipped from fair to critical condition when he suffered either a mild stroke or a hemorrhage, William Berquist, the boy's physician, said.

"He doesn't show any serious adverse effects," Berquist said. "All in all, he's doing remarkably well."

Although the physician is not sure what caused the clot in Christopher's brain, he said it seems to be getting smaller, according to recent brain scans.

A week later he was out of intensive care and allowed back in his hospital room, Mrs. Sumner said. Although a second biopsy showed "a little" rejection and the boy has a case of the flu, he seems to be doing well, his mother said.

Berquist agreed, adding that the boy's new liver is functioning well.

Meanwhile, the almost-4-year-old is getting a bit restless after being hospitalized more than a month, his mother reports.

"I'm hearing, 'I wanna go home.' I keep saying, I do too, dear," she said.

He received two "patio passes" over the weekend, which allow his parents to take

Upland High teachers ponder where to teach

By Marianne Aiken

As the deadline nears for Upland High School teachers to decide where they'll teach next fall, negotiations to bring them into the new Upland Unified School District still are incomplete.

About 40 educators — including many teachers and principals from Upland elementary schools in addition to high school teachers — packed a meeting of the unified district board recently, saying they hope campaign promises become a reality.

Voters last fall decided Upland High School should leave the Chaffey Joint Union High School District July 1 to merge with Upland School District to form a new, unified district.

Teachers at the high school have to decide by Feb. 1 if they want to stay at Upland High and become employees of the new unified school district in Upland or if they want to leave the high school and continue employment with the Chaffey district.

Cal French, head of Upland High's English department, spoke of "divided loyalties" teachers feel as the school prepares to split from the Chaffey district.

French said he wanted to believe the Upland board would stick to its campaign promises that teachers wouldn't lose anything by joining the unified district.

"When I hear there are certain ... games being played, what was said in the campaign may have just been rhetoric," he said.

"That's not the way we look at people," responded board President Frank Guzowski.

Guzowski said the district has a record of "excellent" employee relations and no major grievances have been filed against the district in the last 10 years.

"I think we said (during the campaign) we'd do the best we could for education," Guzowski said. "Our responsibility is not to one group. It's to education."

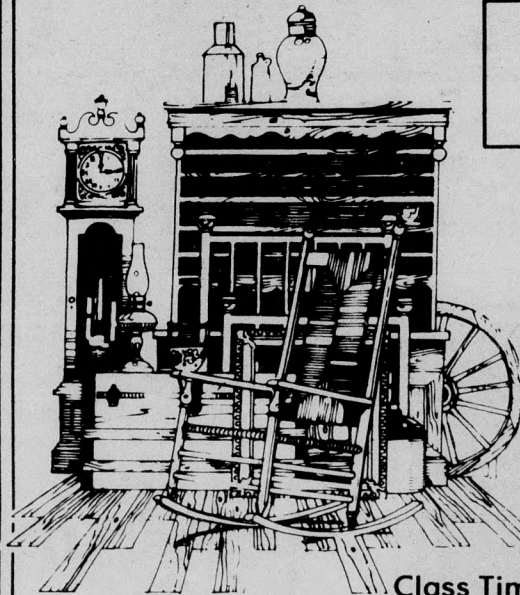

"It's no takeover down there," Guzowski said in response to high school science teacher Dave Ficke's remarks that the unification amounted to a "takeover" of the high school.

Ficke said morale at the high

"We Sell America" Right Here In Your Home Town!

Chamber believes residents should pitch in

By Mike Krapfl

Rancho Cucamonga's Chamber of Commerce would like a prettier city and would like residents to consider paying for it, according to a chamber report delivered to City Hall last Friday.

The city could be made prettier, according to the chamber, by burying telephone and utility lines.

Chamber President Bob Dutton said last week, "We (the chamber) feel it's an eyesore to have overhead utility lines."

Rancho Cucamonga's Planning Commission agrees and has, since last fall, required developers to bury cables when they build a project or pay a fee for the cables' future undergrounding.

That piecemeal system, however, has been plagued by appeals from developers who have called the burden of bearing the cost of burying utilities unfair.

Developers must pay about $160 to bury one foot of cable, according to Barrye R. Hanson, Rancho Cucamonga's senior civil engineer.

The chamber's report, which was solicited by the City Council, asks city officials to abandon the current system and consider using a citywide assessment district to pay for the undergrounding.

An assessment district enables the city to levy a tax to fund the development of parks and other special projects.

Although the chamber is asking the city to consider an assessment district, "the chamber is in no way suggesting a mandatory assessment district," Dutton said. "This is a beautification project that voters should (consider) before anybody is assessed anything."

"If the voters don't want an assessment district — if they don't mind the overhead utilities — who are we to say they should pay to put them underground?" Dutton said.

Mayor Dennis Stout, who was one of the planning commissioners responsible for approving the commission's undergrounding ordinance, said he had yet to see the chamber's report and, therefore, would not comment on it.

him outside in his stroller, Mrs. Sumner said.

"He was amazed there was still a sun out there," she said.

Christopher had shown serious signs of rejection immediately after his transplant Dec. 13, causing speculation that he might need yet another liver.

He adapted to the new liver, but later was readmitted to intensive care Dec. 25 because of an infection, thwarting family Christmas plans.

Still, Mrs. Sumner is counting on her son being back home in time for his birthday Feb. 9.

"I think they're hoping to have him out in two to three weeks," she said.

Mrs. Sumner has alternated vigils over Christopher with her husband, Mark, since his admittance to the medical center in early December.

Adult video store was investigated for year

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Upland police detectives investigated T&A Video for more than a year before it raided the adult business two weeks ago, Capt. Gary Hart said.

Detectives served the store at 2121 W. Foothill Blvd. with a search warrant, arrested two employees and confiscated 30 films, 10 magazines and two books, he said.

The magazines, books and films are being labeled obscene by police.

Earlier, officers had purchased four films in order to show proof of obscenity and gain the warrant, Hart said.

The investigation began soon after the store opened its doors in October 1985 in answer to citizen complaints, he said.

A community group made up mostly of nearby business owners and employees regularly attended City Council meetings, expressing outrage at their neighbor. In response the city eventually passed a law restricting the location of adult businesses and requiring removal of doors from video-viewing booths in such stores.

Undercover officers visited T&A Video each time the department got a complaint, as well as the regular visits.

"We were in there at least once a week," Hart said.

"It took us a long time to build the case. We in Upland have never had an adult bookstore ... It took us awhile to get ourselves up to gear to handle this," he said.

Hart also explained that a change in police personnel slowed the probe.

In addition the amount of obscene material has increased steadily since the store first opened, Hart said.

"It started out that we didn't find anything and then they brought more and more in," he said.

Hart said the detectives decided which material was obscene based on six guidelines: rape, excessive violence, incest, bestiality, killings and excrement. Most of the videos seized were apparently homemade, he said.

Because Hart has been in touch with Chief Deputy District Attorney Nathan Schilt throughout the investigation, Hart is confident that the district attorney's office will prosecute the store, he said.

Although employees Brad Goodson and Roy Garia were arrested and released with citations, owner Weldon Randall Welty was not arrested, Hart said.

Uplanders object to Circle K center in neighborhood

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Fifty neighbors of a proposed Upland shopping center let their objections to a Circle K and other stores be known at an advisory meeting last week.

Planning Director Jeff Bloom and the developer's architect, Don Perryman, held the informal meeting to work out a compromise for the 27,000-square-foot center on the northeast corner of Campus Avenue and 15th Street.

A handful of residents protested the center at the Planning Commission's Dec. 23 meeting, where the issue was delayed until tonight.

Five times as many people showed up to object to the center this time, and they were more interested in forcing the city's capitulation than compromise, Bloom said.

"Their principle conclusion is that they would rather not have any center at all," he said.

Most residents had just heard about the plans for a 24-hour convenience store and accompanying row of shops, explained neighbor Joe Blackstock, whose Sixth Avenue home overlooks the property proposed for the center.

Since his home is within 300 feet of the project site, Blackstock was notified of the December meeting, but many of the surrounding residents didn't learn of the plans until he and other neighbors copied their letters from the city and handed them out, he said.

The residents object to the convenience store in particular because of the possibility it will bring crime to the largely residential area, Blackstock said.

The quiet neighborhood is surrounded by a closed landfill, a power plant and other homes, but no other commercial ventures.

Since the Circle K would be the only store in the northeast quadrant of the city it could attract loiterers, Blackstock said.

Bloom said he will recommend that the commission require the convenience store to close at about 11 p.m. In addition, he will suggest that the access from Sixth Avenue, which backs up against the property, be an entrance. That could cut down traffic, he said.

Blackstock said many residents might be satisfied with such a compromise, but added that some seem prepared to fight the center if it means going to the City Council.

He added that when he moved in a year ago he was told that the corner property was zoned commercial, but many of the residents who have lived there longer did not know a center could be built there until last week.

school is low because of the unification.

Guzowski said the board would get an offer to the teachers by the beginning of the last week in January.

Kathy Beard, coordinator of the high school's Gifted and Talented Education program, said it will be difficult for many teachers to decide whether to stay or go.

"I'm getting the feeling there's a lot of tossing to and fro, that the decision is a toughie for a lot of people," she said. "I'm one of those who can't make up my mind as to whether I want to stay at Upland or stay with the Chaffey district. I'm very torn.

We're kind of caught between a rock and a hard spot."

Upland schools chief George Renworth said teachers "won't be offered exactly the same thing" they have in the Chaffey contract, but there is room for negotiation.

"We very much want to have all of the teachers at Upland High School stay at Upland High School. However, there are some things in the Chaffey contract that aren't fiscally sound for the Upland district to adopt," Renworth said.

He said Upland probably will not be able to match Chaffey's lifetime payments of health and welfare benefits for teachers who retire after 28 years of service.

"Our district pays until age 65," he said. "We don't think it's fiscally sound to pay that benefit for a lifetime."

There have been two negotiation sessions between the district and the Upland Teachers Association.

Renworth guessed about 30 of the high school's 110 teachers will stay with the Chaffey district.

About 50 additional teachers will need to be hired to meet 2,950 youngsters in the classroom next fall, he estimated.

Woman spends her spare time helping blind

By Suzanne Sproul

Seated at her kitchen table in front of a silver machine resembling a typewriter, Rose Kelber deftly transcribes in Braille.

Worthless busy work has always bothered her, she said, although needlepoint offers her a respite from hours at her Braille writer.

But the Ontario mother of five prefers to spend most of her spare time transcribing books into Braille so blind people may have an opportunity to expand their worlds.

"I was looking for something different to do with my time. I saw a small notice about Braille transcribers in the newspaper and I've been doing it for the past 30 years.

"Some work you can't learn by listening. This is where Braille transcribers are needed," Kelber said.

Kelber is teaching a Braille-transcribing course at the Ontario City Library on Tuesdays at 9 a.m.

"Although I've already had one class, anyone who might be interested in learning this skill is invited. I'll catch them up on what they missed," she said. "We desperately need more transcribers because many of our transcribers have either moved away or gotten tired of it. I would love to see that room filled."

Learning to transcribe written phrases and thoughts into a conglomeration of raised dots on a piece of 11-inch-by-11½-inch paper is difficult and time-consuming. It takes six to nine months of instruction before a student receives Kelber's approval and is eligible to be certified by the Library of Congress.

The small Braille writer contains only six keys, but there are 276 contractions alone a student must learn.

"The position and combination of the dots and how it sits on the cell (space) all mean something.

"It's easier to write Braille than to read it. I can read Braille, but I do it by looking at the formation of the dots on the page," Kelber said.

And students are expected to study their lessons. About six to eight hours per week is needed if a student wants to keep up with the instruction, she said.

"It's tough to learn a new skill but anyone with patience and perseverance can learn," she said.

In addition to the Ontario library classes she teaches, Kelber also instructs visually impaired Chaffey College students.

Kelber said her satisfaction from donating so many hours of time to her Braille classes is the excitement shown by a blind person when they enjoy reading.

"It's important for a blind child or person to go with his sighted brothers and sisters to the library and have the same opportunity of choosing a book," she said.

The Ontario City Library is one of about 20 in this country with extensive collections of books in Braille, Kelber said.

"I'm excited about the changes that have happened. There now are computers that transcribe in Braille. What used to take about 20 minutes now can be done quickly.

"I find transcribing very worthwhile. Teaching it is also fun. It's exciting to see someone start with something new and leave with a new skill. It's a labor of love for me," she said.

Anyone interested in Braille transcribing can call 986-5060.

Variety of souls wind up getting lost

While there is no single type of person who gets lost in the mountains, rescuers say they most fear "the guy who takes off saying all he needs is a knife."

"People who need to be rescued — and we have at least five or six each year — come in all ages and all levels of hiking experience," according to Sgt. Del Wiedeman of the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department Search and Rescue team.

"The one thing most victims have in common is that they are not prepared for the unexpected," added Wiedeman, a longtime rescue expert who was called in to coordinate the search for two lost Rancho Cucamonga youths earlier this month.

According to Mt. Baldy Assistant Fire Chief Gary Wilson, a total of 165 volunteers — including a school secretary who was called out of bed three times in one night to duplicate maps and directions — worked on the recent rescue operation headquartered in Mt. Baldy Village.

"The entire operation, which successfully evacuated the two hikers just before another storm hit, was carried out through the cooperation of more than a dozen agencies — many really unsung," said Wilson, who first organized the rescue effort.

Bill Stead, chief of the Mt. Baldy Volunteer Fire Department, is quick to point out that the search and rescue team volunteers are "highly professional — just not paid."

"These men and women are a cross-section of all jobs and backgrounds who want to serve their community, like the outdoors and love the challenge that this type of activity involves," said Stead.

The recent rescue received a great deal of attention when Pat Lindberg and Robert Loer, both 19, failed to return to a predetermined meeting place on Jan. 4 after they left Ice House Canyon 48 hours earlier for a weekend hike. The two were caught in an intense snowstorm and took shelter in a tree stump.

On Jan. 6, the two were spotted by rescuers in a helicopter and flown out of the rugged Cucamonga Peak area just as a second storm moved into the area. The timing was so close that the rescue helicopter was unable to return and evacuate several searchers who then were forced to spend the night camped in the area.

But, Stead added, almost every snowy day brings potential victims to the mountains. Two years ago, when the snow was heavy during the two-week winter holidays, more than 60 rescue operations were conducted in the Baldy area.

The recent rescue was the first time a mutual incident command system, patterned after what brush firefighters have perfected, was put into use, Wiedeman said.

"This was our first full-scale operation of the cooperative system which involves a network of agencies and teams in both Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties. It ran so smoothly because it involved people trained to work together and who respect each other," Wiedeman said. Many decisions were made as a team, added the sergeant.

After the authorities were notified by parents that the youths were missing, a limited search began on Monday morning.

"There are a lot of decisions to be made," said Wilson. "The first step is to determine if the victims may walk out by themselves. Then, there is a lot of detective work to find out all possible information about the hikers: their equipment, supplies, destination and experience."

Stead said it's even necessary to determine if the hikers are indeed lost or if they have departed from their announced plans, either accidentally or deliberately.

Once a full-scale search is mounted, a call goes out to search and rescue teams.

"We try to use local county teams first, but must be careful not to deplete our manpower in case there is another emergency elsewhere," Wiedeman said.

Stead explained that volunteers on search and rescue teams are highly trained professionals who buy their own equipment and spend hundreds of hours in training.

"I'd estimate that it costs $2,500 to acquire all the clothing and equipment needed by a search and rescue team member. In addition, some 800 hours of training are required for the basic instruction," Stead said.

Also, teams train once or twice a month, attend numerous conference and training sessions to perfect their skills and master the coordination of effort to successfully perform their rescue role.

"In addition, these men and women train and exercise daily to keep their bodies in peak condition," Stead added. "When the calls come they must be prepared."

In the case of the recent rescue, only about 10 men, such as deputies, were paid professionals working regular hours. Volunteers usually have an informal agreement with their employers which allow them to participate in rescue operations when called upon.

"Those of us in charge stayed up all Monday night dividing maps into grid patterns and arranging all other details for the teams who arrived at dawn to be ferried by helicopters into their assigned search areas," Wilson said.

Among the support agencies — along with the San Bernardino sheriffs who were in charge — were the Mt. Baldy Fire Department; U.S. Forest Service, which provided quarters; California Division of Forestry; Montclair and Rialto fire departments, which supplied radios and equipment; the county road department, which cleared ice from roads and parking areas so the helicopters could land; and the Southern California Edison and General Telephone companies, which brought in emergency utility lines.

"Even the Mt. Baldy school principal and secretary spent hours duplicating maps and instructions for us," Wilson said.

Ambulance crews, hospital personnel and private citizens such as Bob Chapman, an expert on the search area, worked on the rescue effort.

Wilson said he appreciated many people who called to offer their assistance. But, he said, rescue volunteers must have special training especially in view of current liability laws.

Stead said hikers would not need rescuing as often if people were better prepared and used common sense.

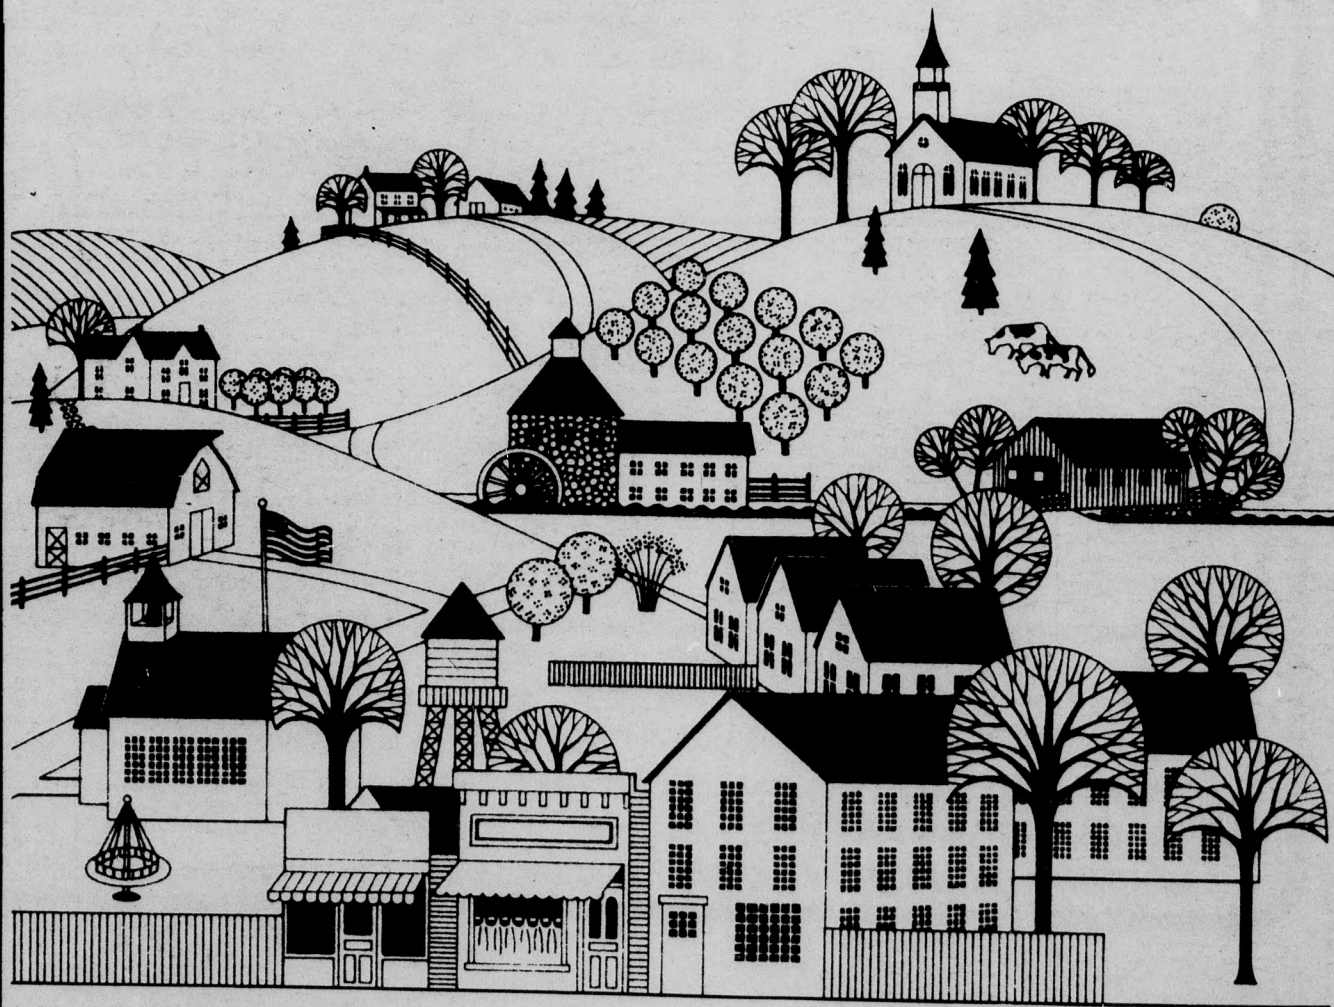

"We live in a flat-land state of urban communities, so the public does not respect the potential dangers of a hike in the mountains," Stead said.
